7pm to 9pm

Lynn Ruane, an independent Senator of Seanad Éireann, and a former President of Trinity College Dublin's Students' Union, has been a long-time activist and campaigner on issues of justice and equality.

Lynn grew up on a local authority estate in Killinarden, West Tallaght and left school early at 15yrs as a single mother. She returned to education through a programme for young mothers in An Cosán, a community education project in Jobstown, which led to Lynn working with local addiction programmes for many years. Lynn returned to education again through the Access Programme at Trinity College, and involvement in the student politics there eventually led to her being elected into Seanad Éireann in 2016.

On the 19th of November, Lynn has kindly agreed to come and talk to the community of St. Teresa's Gardens and surrounding areas. Young people from Dublin 8 would be particularly welcome to come and listen to her inspiring story.
